

Contents

List of Figures	ix
Map List	x
Acknowledgements	xi
1 Studying decolonization	1
Prelude	1
Introduction	1
Writing about decolonization	3
Portuguese (de)colonization: Three conditions	10
Textual and visual landscapes	14
2 Entangling decolonizations: Goa, Mozambique and Angola	21
Introduction	21
Goa, Mozambique and Angola: Portuguese decolonization in India and Africa, 1961–1975	23
Goa	23
Mozambique	27
Angola	30
Decolonization of the third empire	32
3 Emigrating Goans	35
Introduction	35
Indian Ocean ethnographies	37
Imperial connections: Goa and Mozambique	39
Empire builders, agency and the spirit of the times (1920s)	44
Goan decolonization, resistance and neocolonialism (1950s–1960s)	47
Mozambican independence, chaos and dreams (1975)	50
Conclusion	53
4 Goans going fishing	55
Introduction	55
Indian Ocean fishing	57
Goans going fishing	58
Literary and photographic interventions: text and image
Couto and Rangel	61

(Ethnographic) notes on a ritual	67
Taking the ferry	67
Waiting for the wind	69
Performing the Catholic mass	74
Blessing the boats	76
Eating prawns	77
5 Dispossessing things	81
Introduction	81
Writing about decolonization	83
Thinking about things	85
Ricardo Rangel: 'The departure of the colonialists'	87
Carlos Garçaõ: 'We must take care'	94
Ryszard Kapuściński: 'We were imprisoned in a besieged city'	99
Conclusion: On the postcolony	106
6 Driving from Angola to South Africa	109
Introduction	109
Decolonization as a diasporic port of entry	111
Exile or saying goodbye	113
Refugees, toilets and 'second class citizenship'	116
Conclusion: Portuguese-ness in post-apartheid South Africa	124
7 Renovating in Beira	127
Introduction	127
On ruination	129
On Beira	131
On renovation	133
(Landscapes of) leisure	135
The Ferroviário swimming pool	135
The Novocine movie theatre	137
The Grande Hotel	139
The Riviera cafe	141
An aerial viewpoint	143
Reflecting: From Mozambique to Goa	145
Notes	148
Bibliography	202
Interviews	217
Index	219